vascular reactivity and growth in SHR.
Angiotensin II (Ang II) has been reported to play a role in the control of vascular growth and reactivity. The present study examined the effects of prolonged treatment with the Ang II type 1 receptor (AT1) receptor antagonist losartan on the growth and reactivity of mesenteric resistance vessels of adult spontaneously hypertensive rats (SHR) as a model of hypertension. Following 7- to 8-week treatment with losartan (10 mg/kg per day), vascular tissue was collected from treated and untreated normotensive

Wistar-Kyoto (WKY) and SHR. Vascular structure and function were evaluated ex vivo in two vessel baths: isolated perfused mesenteric arteries and isolated perfused mesenteric arterioles. Compared with untreated WKY (mean \pm SE), losartan-treated WKY showed a reduction in average mean arterial pressure (by 25 ± 2 mm Hg) and mesenteric resistance vessels showed a reduction in both media cross-sectional area (by $36 \pm 2\%$) and wall thickness (by $11 \pm 2\%$). In contrast, mesenteric resistance vessel reactivity to nitric oxide was increased and that to noradrenaline was unchanged in losartan-treated WKY compared with WKY controls. This was associated with a decrease in the concentrations of both Ang I and Ang II in the mesenteric resistance vessel (P Q: Index Error in Python I am having error in my code.. n is a list..
